Andreas Meyer is a very good example of »renewable resources« in the Pfalz region, by which we mean young winemakers who succeed in taking their parents' estate a bit further. There can be little to complain about the range of wines presented, the young man obviously has the right feeling of where to place his wines. The three Pinot Blanc wines, for example, have clear differences, but they are all good to very good, and the pricing appears logical too. The entry-level wines are pleasant to drink, the top-flight wines are to rave about –what more could one want?
